

September 18, 2017.

Dear LSA Executive Committee,

We the undersigned are writing to urge the LSA to take specific and visible action on the widespread problem of sexual harassment and the failure of existing responses from the academic units where our members study and work. While harassment is a problem that extends across academia and beyond, we have an obligation to address this problem within our professional community rather than relying solely on other institutions. Simply put, our discipline suffers when our students and colleagues cannot do their best work.

Though the nature and extent of the problem varies across institutions, we know that sexual misconduct, harassment, and assault are far more common than many of our colleagues believe. We also know that institutional responses vary in appropriateness and effectiveness, with the result that improper behavior and abuses of power that should be addressed directly often remain an open secret, or are actively concealed. We know this from many, many sources, including the 2015 AAU Campus Climate Surveys, and other more recent reviews that many of our students have participated in. Too many of us know it from personal experience. In light of recent events, both students and colleagues are telling many of us that they have come to expect sexual harassment to be a ‘normal’ and unavoidable part of academic life. We find it distressing that students have reached this conclusion, especially so early in their careers. The harassment also aimed at students and colleagues is not restricted to a single gender or sexual orientation. We also know that too many academics prefer to “stay out of it” and avoid the problem, and that the culture of academia – from which our field is not immune – makes such denial too easy.

We call on the LSA to make a commitment to the following

1. Reaffirm publicly and unambiguously the unacceptability of
  - sexual harassment
  - the abuse of power
  - the creation of hostile work or study environments
  - failing to take victims’ reports seriously, protecting perpetrators of sexual harassment and other abuses of power.
2. Charge the Ethics Committee with reviewing the Society’s ethics statement in light of recent events and advise the LSA on how it should be revised to address the damage that such actions cause for individuals and the field.
3. Develop and promote support mechanisms for linguists who become aware of or are subject to hostile work and study environments. Support might include (but not be limited to)
  - (a) advice concerning what is considered normal and acceptable and what isn’t, giving specific hypothetical examples;
  - (b) direction to counseling and other resources within problematic institutions and outside;
or
  - (c) providing a way for senior linguists from outside departments to act as representatives for junior colleagues in hostile work environments, by contacting chairs or other members of a university or research community to discuss problems, while maintaining the anonymity of directly concerned parties as needed.

4. Develop and disseminate codes of conduct for LSA-organized events, particularly the Annual Meeting and the Linguistic Institutes. The LSA, as an organization, should do everything it can to minimize harassment at the events it sponsors.
5. Provide funding to the COSWL, CEDL, and Ethics Standing Committees to develop and disseminate materials for bystander intervention and avoiding implicit bias.
6. Incorporate meaningful training into the professional program at LSA meetings.

It has become obvious that even in the year 2017, academia has not made sufficient progress in fostering a culture of respect for all people. Linguistics is far from immune to this problem. We believe the LSA has an opportunity to realize its role as a professional organization for its American membership, as well as for the 33% of members from outside the US, many of whom face similar problems. It is wrong for undergraduate students, graduate students, postdocs, staff, and faculty to have to be prepared for sexual harassment at all times, and for them to know that their institution may provide no recourse if they are victimized. We therefore ask that the LSA provide a system that surpasses the boundaries of individual institutions for helping to resolve harassment. Furthermore, we ask the LSA's help in encouraging a culture of respect for all within our field.
